

Motor Vehicle Accident Recoveries in Florida: Get Money Even Without Injuries

Most drivers believe that if they walk away from a crash without injuries, they're not entitled to any additional compensation. That's a costly myth. In Florida, motor vehicle accident recoveries go far beyond medical bills and include two powerful claims many people never file: diminished value and loss of use compensation.

Diminished Value is the immediate drop in your vehicle's resale or trade-in value after an accident, even after perfect repairs. A 2024 Carfax report showed that vehicles with accident history sell for 20–30% less on average. In Florida, if you were less than 50% at fault, the at-fault driver's insurance owes you this loss — often $2,000 to $15,000+ depending on the vehicle.

Loss of Use compensates you for the time your car was in the shop or undrivable. Florida courts recognize this as a real economic damage. You can recover rental car costs or a fair daily rate (typically $30–$100/day) multiplied by the reasonable repair period.

Together, these motor vehicle accident recoveries can add thousands to your settlement with zero out-of-pocket attorney fees when you work with the right firm.

Here's the problem: insurance adjusters rarely volunteer this information. Most diminished value claims are denied on the first attempt using outdated formulas or "policy exclusion" excuses that don't hold up under Florida law.

At Lost Value Law, we specialize exclusively in these non-injury motor vehicle accident recoveries. Our team forces insurance companies to pay fair diminished value using independent appraisals and, when necessary, aggressive bad-faith litigation. Last year alone, we recovered over $4.8 million for Florida drivers who thought their claim ended with the body shop bill.

Don't leave money on the table. If your vehicle was damaged in an accident through no fault (or minimal fault) of your own in the last 4 years, you likely have a valid claim.
